The South African pyraster of the genus Pyraster are corallivorous predators with radula-like feeding mechanisms. They are distributed throughout the southern Atlantic and Indian Ocean. A single starfish (Pyraster aeruginon) collected from a local aquarium wholesaler in Eastern Cape Province, South Africa, was examined for signs of acute toxicity and for haematology. It showed symptoms of lethargy and loss of all mobility, with disintegration of the bodies along the arms. This organism may pose a severe threat to fish tanks. Pyrasters are known to feed on the bodies of injured conspecifics, indicating cannibalistic behaviour, which may be associated with the species' life history. Concentrations of haemolymph (plasma) proteins were measured by high-performance liquid chromatography, and total and differential leucocyte counts by a hemocytometer.
