Pleuropneumonia-like Lesion Presenting as a Pulmonary Mass in a Bucking Horse. A 5-year-old Tennessee Walking Horse, a breed known for a propensity to develop pleuropneumonia and pleuritis, presented with a sudden onset of inappetance, lethargy, and a palpable mass in the right caudal thoracic lung lobe. Results of a physical examination, a modified pudendal lateral radiographic view, thoracic ultrasonography, cytology and culture of bronchoalveolar lavage fluid, and histopathology and culture of samples of an enucleated lung lobe were consistent with pleuropneumonia and pleuritis. A diagnosis was not made until a lung lobe was removed and submitted for histopathology; the lung lobe was not inflated, and the mass could not be palpated. Histopathology of the lung lobe revealed suppurative, perivascular interstitial pneumonia, with marked consolidation and multifocal necrosis of alveolar walls, and necrosis of bronchiolar epithelium and intraluminal degenerative changes of alveolar septa.
